NEW QUESTION # 66

An engineer is working for a manufacturing company that has a centralized deployment model.

Guests at headquarters need wireless access for presentations, demonstrations, and sharing of information. The engineer must provide external users with secure guest access by connecting to anchor controllers on the DMZ. Auto-Anchor Mobility has been selected in the mobility group to accomplish it. Both anchors are configured as part of the mobility group for HQ. Which design approach ensures that clients connect to the primary controller first and are pushed to the secondary if the primary fails?

- A. Set the Anchor priority for the primary controller to 1.
- B. Configure ECMP but weigh the cost to be higher to go to the secondary.
- C. Set the Anchor priority for the secondary controller to 1.
- D. Configure ECMP but weigh the cost to be higher to go to the primary.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Setting the Anchor priority for the primary controller to 1 ensures that clients connect to the primary controller first. The Anchor priority is a value assigned to each controller within a mobility group to determine the order in which clients should connect to the controllers. A lower priority value has higher precedence. Therefore, by setting the primary controller's Anchor priority to 1, it becomes the preferred controller for client connections. If the primary controller fails, clients are then pushed to the secondary controller, which should have a higher Anchor priority value.
