NEW QUESTION # 87

A developer is building a custom component in Lightning web components (LWC) that has a grandchild component that needs to pass information to the grandparent component. Ex Ther m Ss What is the correct way to demonstrate the passing of a message from the grandchild component to the grandparent component?

```
// grandParent.js
handleMessage(message) { console.log(message); // 'Hello from Grandchild'
}
```

- A.
- B.

Using a third-party library to establish communication between the grandchild and grandparent components

```
// grandChild.js
PubSub.publish('message', 'Hello from Grandchild');

// grandParent.js
connectedCallback() {
  this.subscription = PubSub.subscribe('message', (message) => { console.log(message); // 'Hello from Grandchild'
  });
}
```

Using an attribute on the child component to pass the message from the child to the grandparent

```
// child.js
this.message = 'Hello from Child';

// child.html
<template>
<c-grand-parent message={message}></c-grand-parent>
</template>

// grandParent.js
```

- C. @api message;
- D.

Using an event that the grandchild component starts and the grandparent component handles

```
// grandChild.js
this.dispatchEvent(new CustomEvent('message', {
  bubbles: true,
  detail: { message: 'Hello from Grandchild' }
}));
```

Answer: C

Explanation:

The correct way to demonstrate the passing of a message from the grandchild component to the grandparent component is by using an attribute on the child component to pass the message. This can be done by using the @api decorator in the grandchild component and then handling the message in the grandparent component with the handleMessage method. For example:

```
<!-- grandchild.html --> <template> <lightning-button label="Send Message" onclick={handleClick}></lightning-button>
</template>
```

```
// grandchild.js import { LightningElement, api } from 'lwc';
```

export default class Grandchild extends LightningElement { // Declare an attribute to pass the message @api message = 'Hello from grandchild';
```

```
// Handle the button click and fire an event handleClick() { // Create a custom event with the message as detail const event = new CustomEvent('message', { detail: this.message }); // Dispatch the event from this component this.dispatchEvent(event); } }
```

```
<!-- child.html --> <template> <c-grandchild onmessage={handleMessage}></c-grandchild> </template>
```

```
// child.js import { LightningElement } from 'lwc';

export default class Child extends LightningElement { // Handle the message event from the grandchild component handleMessage(event) { // Get the message from the event detail const message = event.detail; // Fire another event with the same message to pass it to the parent component this.dispatchEvent(new CustomEvent('message', { detail: message })); } }
```

```
<!-- parent.html --> <template> <c-child onmessage={handleMessage}></c-child> </template>
```

```
// parent.js import { LightningElement } from 'lwc';
```

```
export default class Parent extends LightningElement { // Declare a property to store the message message;
```

```
// Handle the message event from the child component handleMessage(event) { // Get the message from the event detail and assign it to the property this.message = event.detail; // Do something with the message, such as display it on the screen console.log(this.message); } }
