Snowflake Certified SnowPro Associate - Platform Certification Sample Questions (Q154-Q159):

NEW QUESTION # 154

What is the LIST command used for in Snowflake?

- A. Lists all the privileges granted on a specific object.
- B. Lists all the files in a given stage.
- C. Lists all the tables in a specific schema.
- D. Lists all the users assigned to a given role.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The LIST command displays all files available in a stage-internal, external, user, or table stages.

It is typically used prior to COPY INTO to confirm which files are available for loading.

SHOW TABLES lists tables; SHOW GRANTS shows privileges; GRANTS queries show user-role assignments-not LIST.

NEW QUESTION # 155

What is the function of the SKIP_HEADER file format option when loading CSV data?

- A. To include the header row as data.
- B. To ignore empty rows in the data file.
- C. To automatically create column names from the header row.
- D. To skip a specified number of header rows.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The SKIP_HEADER option instructs Snowflake to ignore a defined number of initial rows, typically the column header row in CSV files. For example:

```
CREATE FILE FORMAT my_fmt
```

```
TYPE='CSV'
```

```
SKIP_HEADER=1;

When used with COPY INTO, Snowflake loads only the actual data rows while excluding header metadata.

This prevents header values from being inserted as data and ensures consistent row structure.

Other options:

* SKIP_BLANK_LINES controls handling of empty rows, not headers.

* Snowflake does not auto-generate column names from header rows; table schemas must be predefined.

* Including header rows as data is undesirable and incorrect in most pipelines.

Thus, SKIP_HEADER is used exclusively to omit header rows during ingestion.

NEW QUESTION # 156

What parameter is used to define how long Time Travel can be used to access a table?

- A. USE_CACHED_RESULT
- B. DATA_RETENTION_TIME_IN_DAYS
- C. TIMEZONE
- D. DATE_OUTPUT_FORMAT

Answer: B

Explanation:

The DATA_RETENTION_TIME_IN_DAYS parameter controls the Time Travel retention period for Snowflake objects such as tables, schemas, and databases. It specifies the number of days that historical data (prior versions of rows or dropped objects) is retained and accessible via Time Travel. Within this retention window, users can query data "as of" a previous time, restore dropped objects, or clone objects at a historical point.

DATE_OUTPUT_FORMAT determines the display format for date values and is unrelated to historical retention. TIMEZONE affects how timestamps are interpreted and displayed, not how long data history is preserved. USE_CACHED_RESULT governs whether Snowflake may return cached query results, not Time Travel behavior.

NEW QUESTION # 157

Which of the following are types of tables in Snowflake? (Choose any 3 options)

- A. Virtual
- B. Permanent
- C. Transient
- D. Temporary

Answer: B,C,D

Explanation:

Snowflake provides three main table types: Permanent, Transient, and Temporary. Permanent tables support full Time Travel and Fail-safe, and are designed for long-term storage. Transient tables do not include Fail-safe and are best suited for intermediate or less durable datasets. Temporary tables exist only for the duration of the user session that created them, making them ideal for staging or ephemeral workloads. Snowflake does not have a table type called "Virtual"; therefore, the correct options are Permanent, Temporary, and Transient.

NEW QUESTION # 158

What does a "green" cell execution status indicate in Snowflake Notebooks?

- A. Execution was canceled
- B. Execution failed
- C. Execution succeeded
- D. Execution is pending

Answer: C
