dbt Labs dbt Analytics Engineering Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q55-Q60):

NEW QUESTION # 55

A pull request targeting your main branch has been approved in code review but requires changes after automated tests fail. To address this, you should:

- A. Ask the branch author to add new commits fixing the issues. Then merge when tests pass.
- B. Disable the automated tests temporarily, merge, and re-enable tests later.
- C. Merge the pull request despite the failing tests, resolving the issues in a subsequent fix.
- D. Directly modify the branch by pushing commits to fix the tests.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The branch author should update their pull request with fixes. Merging should typically only happen once tests pass, indicating code stability.

NEW QUESTION # 56

(Multiple Select)

- A. Validating that the row count of the staging model falls within an expected range.
- B. Checking for referential integrity with a separate lookup table.
- C. Enforcing specific ratios or relationships between aggregated values.
- D. Ensuring column ordering matches an external specification.

Answer: A,B,C

Explanation:

These involve domain-specific logic or cross-table checks, which are not covered by standard generic tests. D (column order) is typically less critical for analysis purposes.

NEW QUESTION # 57

You're working with highly sensitive production data that contains personally identifiable information (PII). How would this impact the design of your dbt project environments?

- A. Potentially create separate, lower-level environments with obfuscated, anonymized, or synthetic datasets for broader development.
- B. Implement strict access controls ensuring only authorized individuals can access production environments.
- C. All of the above.
- D. Employ data masking or tokenization techniques within dbt models that process sensitive data.

Answer: C

Explanation:

A: Access management is essential for sensitive data. B: Lower environments should enable development without exposing PII unnecessarily. C: Masking/tokenization within models adds an extra layer of data protection.

NEW QUESTION # 58

A performance-critical model depends on multiple complex transformations that would benefit from being pre-computed. Direct querying of this model should be as fast as possible. Which materialization is likely the best choice?

- A. View
- B. Incremental
- C. Table
- D. Ephemeral

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation: Tables store materialized results on disk. When pre-calculated, they offer the fastest query response time, making them suitable for performance-sensitive models.

NEW QUESTION # 59

A colleague has introduced a new sensitive column into a source table. You need to update the dbt project documentation accordingly. Which of the following actions should you take?

- A. Update the source documentation and add references to that documentation in the appropriate model's YAML file
- B. Add a clear description of the sensitive column in its corresponding YAML file.
- C. Add the column description and tag it using a custom sensitive tag in the YAML file.
- D. Consult your organization's data governance policies and consider additional measures beyond simple documentation.

Answer: A,C,D

Explanation:

B). Tagging sensitive data helps categorize it, allowing for potential filtering or access control within the documentation. C.: Handling sensitive data goes beyond simple documentation. Its crucial to follow your organization's data security and governance protocols. D: Referencing source documentation provides full context and traceability of the sensitive data's origin.
