AAVSB Veterinary Technician National Exam Sample Questions (Q34-Q39):

NEW QUESTION # 34

When performing a computed tomography (CT) scan, which of the following choices is not a benefit of parenteral contrast administration?

- A. Identify blood vessels
- B. All of the options are benefits of CT
- C. Provides more information than conventional radiography
- D. Highlight areas with increased vascularity, such as with tumors and infection

Answer: B

Explanation:

Correct answer: All of the options are benefits of CT

Parental contrast may be administered during a CT. Typically, a nonionic organic iodinated product, such as iohexol, is used as a positive contrast agent. It may be given by multiple injectable routes such as intravenous, intracavitary, intrathecal, etc.

When given IV, the contrast demonstrates blood vessel location and tissues with increased blood flow, such as areas with tumors or infection.

When given intrathecally, as with a myelogram, it increases the sensitivity beyond conventional radiography since images are formed into "slices" instead of 2-D images with summation.

NEW QUESTION # 35

Which of the following is considered a psychotropic medication?

- A. Furosemide
- B. Chlorpheniramine
- C. Alprazolam
- D. Digoxin

Answer: C

Explanation:

Psychotropic medications affect the mental state of patients and potentially treat behavior problems. Alprazolam is a benzodiazepine. Benzodiazepines are fast-acting medications with a short duration. They are best used for predictable, anxiety-provoking situations. Digoxin is a cardiac glycoside medication. Chlorpheniramine is a histamine antagonist medication, more commonly known as an antihistamine. Furosemide is a loop diuretic.

NEW QUESTION # 36

Strangles is a highly contagious respiratory disease that affects horses. Strangles causes fever, lack of appetite, and painful swelling underneath the horse's mandible. Once a horse has recovered from strangles, how long does it remain contagious?

- A. Approximately two days
- B. Approximately three weeks
- C. Approximately seven days
- D. Approximately six weeks

Answer: D

Explanation:

Once a horse has recovered from strangles, it remains contagious for approximately six weeks.

Horses can be immunized against the bacterial pathogen that causes strangles, Streptococcus equi, but it is not fully protective.

NEW QUESTION # 37

Part of routine anesthetic maintenance should include regular maintenance by a certified biomedical technician who evaluates the machine and the vaporizer. How frequently should this be performed?

- A. Biannual
- B. Monthly
- C. Biennial
- D. Annually

Answer: D

Explanation:

At least once per calendar year, you should have your machines professionally evaluated, and routine preventative maintenance on the vaporizer and machine should occur. They can address any equipment leaks or other concerns and ensure the machine's continued safety and all working parts.

Monthly professional maintenance would be overkill and too costly, especially if you do your due diligence and keep up with routine daily maintenance.

Biennial or every 2 years is too infrequent to ensure the safety of such a critical piece of equipment.

Biannual, 2 times per year, wouldn't be wrong, but may be cost-prohibitive.

NEW QUESTION # 38

Which of the following would be added to the intravenous fluids of a juvenile patient with hypoglycemia?

- A. Calcium
- B. Dextrose
- C. Sucralose
- D. Sucrose

Answer: B

Explanation:

Dextrose should be added to the fluids of a juvenile patient with hypoglycemia (low blood sugar). Usually, an injection of dextrose diluted 1:1 up to 1:4 with saline is administered IV to treat the initial hypoglycemia and then dextrose is added to a balanced electrolyte solution at a 2.5% to 10% concentration. In most patients, this is effective in elevating blood sugar levels.

Calcium is a mineral used for bone development and nerve conduction, among many other functions in the body. It is not used to treat low blood sugar. Sucrose is table sugar and would not be added to intravenous fluids. Sucralose is an artificial sweetener and not appropriate for the treatment of hypoglycemia.
