NEW QUESTION # 196

What would it mean for the user when designing perceivable content?

- A. The content should only be presented In an audio format.
- B. The content should only be presented In a visual format.
- C. The content should be presented in a way that can be convertible between different formats.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Designing perceivable content means that the content should be presented in a way that can be convertible between different formats, so that users with different sensory abilities can access it. For example, providing text alternatives for images and videos, captions and transcripts for audio, and audio descriptions for visual content. This way, users who are blind, deaf, or have low vision or hearing can perceive the content using assistive technologies, such as screen readers, braille keyboards, or captions. The content should not only be presented in a visual format (A) or an audio format (B), as that would exclude users who cannot see or hear the content. The content should be adaptable to different formats and devices, and follow the Web Content Accessibility Guidelines (WCAG) principle of perceivability¹². Reference:

NEW QUESTION # 197

A UX designer want to understand the mental model of employees who have requested a new internal community the brief specifies what the employees should be able to do on the site but the designer need to suggest and suitable architecture Which technique should be used

- A. treetesting
- B. User test
- C. card sorting
- D. cognitive walkthrough

Answer: C

Explanation:

Card sorting is a UX research method where participants group ideas or information into different categories, based on what feels natural to them. Card sorting is ideal for the early stages of a website project, when the UX designer needs to understand how users organize and label content. Card sorting can help the UX designer to suggest a suitable architecture for the internal community, based on the employees' mental model and expectations. Card sorting can also reveal any gaps or overlaps in the content, and provide insights for naming the categories and subcategories. NEW QUESTION # 198

A UX Designer presents a creative design approach to solving end-user problems, beginning with identifying their needs and ending with creating solutions that meet those needs.

Which approach is being followed?

- A. User Interface Design
- B. Digital Declarative Design
- C. Human-Centered Design
- D. Salesforce Declarative Design

Answer: C

Explanation:

The approach that is being followed by the UX Designer is the Human-Centered Design. This is a creative design approach that focuses on understanding the end-user's needs, problems, and context, and then creating solutions that are desirable, feasible, and viable for them. The Human-Centered Design process typically involves four phases: empathize, define, ideate, and prototype.

Human-Centered Design

Empathize, Define, Ideate, Prototype

NEW QUESTION # 199

A UX Designer is customizing the look and feel of a site using Experience Builder and needs to choose a color for the text and the background of the buttons.

Which accessibility guideline should be considered?

- A. Adaptable
- B. Distinguishable
- C. Navigable

Answer: B

Explanation:

The accessibility guideline of distinguishable means that the information and user interface components must be presented to users in ways that are perceptible. This includes using sufficient contrast between text and background colors, providing text alternatives for non-text content, and making it easier for users to see and hear content. When choosing a color for the text and the background of the buttons, the UX Designer should consider the contrast ratio between them, which should be at least 4.5:1 for normal text and 3:1 for large text. This will ensure that the buttons are visible and readable for users with different visual abilities. Reference:
