GARP Financial Risk and Regulation (FRR) Series Sample Questions (Q354-Q359):

NEW QUESTION # 354

Which one of the following four examples would not be considered a typical source of market risk?

- A. The JPY depreciating against the USD.
- B. Increased default rate on commercial mortgages due to higher interest rates.
- C. Changes in the oil price due to the discovery of new oil fields.
- D. Unexpected changes in the term structure of interest rates.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Market risk typically involves risks that affect the entire market or market segment. These include:

- * Unexpected changes in the term structure of interest rates:
  - * This affects the prices of bonds and other interest-rate-sensitive securities.
- * The JPY depreciating against the USD:
  - * This is an example of foreign exchange risk, which is a type of market risk.
- * Changes in the oil price due to the discovery of new oil fields:
  - * This affects commodities markets and can have broader economic implications.
- * Increased default rate on commercial mortgages due to higher interest rates:
  - * This is more of a credit risk than market risk. It specifically relates to the creditworthiness of borrowers rather than the overall market movements.

Thus, the increased default rate on commercial mortgages due to higher interest rates is not a typical source of market risk.

NEW QUESTION # 355

Bank Alpha is making a decision about lending 10-year loans in a sector that is fairly illiquid and is looking at various options to fund the loans. Which of the following options to fund the loans exhibits the most exogenous liquidity risk?

- A. Foreign exchange markets
- B. The 1-year treasury markets
- C. Overnight interbank markets
- D. The 6-month LIBOR markets

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 356

In the United States, foreign exchange derivative transactions typically occur between

- A. A few large internationally active banks, where the risks become concentrated.
- B. Regional banks with international operations, where the risks depend on the specific derivative transactions.
- C. Thrifts and large commercial banks, where the risks become isolated.
- D. All banks with international branches, where the risks become widely distributed based on trading exposures.

Answer: A

Explanation:

In the United States, foreign exchange derivative transactions typically occur between a few large internationally active banks. These banks are major players in the foreign exchange markets and often act as intermediaries, providing liquidity and managing risks for themselves and their clients. The concentration of these transactions among a few large banks leads to a concentration of risks within these institutions.

NEW QUESTION # 357

Which one of the following four statements regarding the current value of a transaction and its purposes is INCORRECT?

- A. Profit and loss calculations are made by comparing the current values to the intrinsic values.
- B. Margin call by futures exchanges are based on the current market value.
- C. For cash settled instrument the final market value is used to settle the transaction with the counterparty
- D. Counterparty credit risk calculations are made by analyzing the current values of all deals with the same counterparty.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 358

Which one of the four following statements regarding minimum loss data standards is not correct?

- A. The loss data entry should only include the date when the event was reported.
- B. The loss data program must comprehensively capture all material activities.
- C. The loss data entry may include descriptive information about the drivers or causes of the loss event.
- D. The loss data entry must include the actual loss amount.

Answer: A

Explanation:

- * Option A: The loss data entry must include the actual loss amount.
- * Correct as it ensures accurate financial impact recording.
- * Option B: The loss data program must comprehensively capture all material activities.
- * Correct, necessary for a thorough risk management program.
- * Option C: The loss data entry should only include the date when the event was reported.
- * Incorrect, as it is essential to capture both the event date and the report date to understand the timeline of the incident.
- * Option D: The loss data entry may include descriptive information about the drivers or causes of the loss event.
- * Correct, as it provides context and insights into the root causes, aiding in risk analysis and prevention.
