Which two data center network architectures might be proposed by other vendors to compete with Juniper Networks Virtual Chassis Fabric (VCF) solution? (Choose two.)

- A. SON ET 1
- B. FCoE
- C. three-tier architecture
- D. TRILL

Answer: C,D

NEW QUESTION # 44

In an EVPN-VXLAN data center, what would be a reason to consider using discrete border leafs rather than placing border roles onto the spines?

- A. to eliminate multicast traffic in and out of the fabric
- B. to provide specific devices designed for handling traffic burstiness on the WAN
- C. to allow for provisioning ACLs between the data center and the WAN
- D. to provide for differentiated oversubscription ratios for traffic into and out of the data center

Answer: D

Explanation:

Using discrete border leafs enables design flexibility, such as applying different oversubscription ratios for east-west (intra-fabric) and north-south (external) traffic. This separation improves scalability and performance tuning compared to placing border roles directly on spines.

NEW QUESTION # 45

What is the effect of a lower oversubscription ratio on network cost and congestion handling?

- A. A lower oversubscription ratio increases the overall cost of the network.
- B. A lower oversubscription ratio provides more available bandwidth to handle congestion.
- C. A lower oversubscription ratio decreases the overall cost of the network.
- D. A lower oversubscription ratio provides less available bandwidth to handle congestion.

Answer: A,B

Explanation:

Reducing the oversubscription ratio means provisioning more uplink bandwidth relative to access bandwidth, which improves congestion handling and performance but also increases network cost due to the need for additional or higher-capacity links and equipment.
