dbt Labs dbt Analytics Engineering Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q310-Q315):

NEW QUESTION # 310

You notice that your dbt jobs take longer than expected. You suspect potential issues with models referencing large raw tables unnecessarily. Which of the following strategies might help optimize performance? (Choose two)

- A. Add more indexes to all the raw tables in your warehouse.
- B. Convert your most-used models to incremental materializations.
- C. Introduce CTEs within your models to pre-filter raw data where possible.
- D. Move the raw table into a separate staging schema and grant access only to necessary models.

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

Using CTEs to pre-filter and incremental materializations (where applicable) directly reduce the data processed by your models. Options A and C might help in specific cases but don't directly address the core issue.

NEW QUESTION # 311

A model refactors a frequently used SQL calculation. Traditionally this logic was copied across multiple models. Which of the following is the LEAST likely benefit of refactoring this calculation into a macro?

- A. Reduced error potential due to a single source of logic
- B. Improved readability of models
- C. Simplified dependency tracking
- D. Faster dbt job execution time

Answer: D

Explanation:

While macros can sometimes marginally improve performance, their primary benefits are maintainability, readability, and clear dependency tracking.

NEW QUESTION # 312

Business requirements call for a report ranking products based on year-over-year (YoY) revenue growth. Historical data must be preserved. What's a potential issue in implementing this directly in a dbt model?

- A. ref() functions can hinder performance when working with historical data.
- B. Data warehouses might not be optimized for period-over-period comparisons.
- C. Incremental materializations aren't suitable for trend analysis.
- D. Views cannot perform complex date manipulation required for YoY calculations.

Answer: B

Explanation:

YoY calculations can strain database performance. Consider strategies like pre-aggregating data at the month level. Others issues are less likely to be a bottleneck.

NEW QUESTION # 313

(Multiple Select)

- A. You made a typo when defining the column name in your model.
- B. Your dbt tests are invalid.
- C. A ref function referencing another model is incorrect.

- D. An upstream source table schema was updated without updating the dbt model.

Answer: A,C,D

Explanation:

All but option D could lead to this specific error. Tests wouldn't directly cause a column mismatch, but they might help you catch the error.

NEW QUESTION # 314

You want to compare the current version of a file in your working directory to the most recently committed version. Which Git command would be most helpful?

- A. `git diff`
- B. `git log`
- C. `git show`
- D. `git status`

Answer: A

Explanation:

`git diff` shows line-by-line differences between versions, letting you compare your working version to the committed one (HEAD).
