Which attack mitigation must be in place to prevent an attacker from authenticating to a service using a brute force attack?

- A. Use of multifactor authentication for all accounts
- B. Forced password change every 6 months
- C. Use of a password manager
- D. Use of a 100 ms delay between each authentication

Answer: A

Explanation:

Multifactor Authentication (MFA) is one of the most effective mitigations against brute-force attacks. Even if an attacker guesses or steals a user's password, they would still need a second authentication factor (e.g., push notification, hardware token, biometric verification) to complete login.

SCAZT Section 2: User and Device Security (Pages 40-43) emphasizes the importance of MFA in protecting identities from password spraying, credential stuffing, and brute-force attacks.
