NEW QUESTION # 74
Which of the following statements are TRUE about network service quality?

- A. The packet loss rate refers to the percentage of total sent packets that are lost during transmission.
- B. Jitter, also called latency variation, refers to the difference in latencies of packets in the same flow.
- C. Bandwidth, also called throughput, refers to the maximum number of data bits transmitted between two ends within a specified period (1 second) or the average rate at which specific data flows are transmitted between two network nodes. Bandwidth is expressed in bit/s.
- D. Latency refers to the time required to transmit a packet from the transmit end to the receive end.

Answer: A,B,C,D

Explanation:
Network service quality is determined by several key metrics. Below is an analysis of each option:
* Bandwidth : Bandwidth measures the maximum data transfer rate of a network link, expressed in bits per second (bit/s). It represents the capacity of the link to transmit data between two nodes.
* Latency : Latency is the time it takes for a packet to travel from the source to the destination. Lower latency improves real-time communication and application performance.
* Packet loss rate : This metric indicates the percentage of packets that fail to reach their destination due to network congestion, errors, or other issues. High packet loss degrades user experience.
* Jitter : Jitter refers to variations in packet arrival times, which can disrupt real-time applications like voice and video. Consistent latency is critical for smooth performance.
All four options are correct and accurately describe key aspects of network service quality.
