NEW QUESTION # 62

A company is setting up a budget control system to improve financial management. The company completes the following initial steps:

- * Defined financial dimensions
- * Set default time intervals
- * Configured basic budgeting parameters

The company requires the budget control functionality to monitor and compare the actual expenditures to the budgeted amounts.

You need to configure the budget control configuration linked to the budgeted amount so that the system can effectively monitor and compare actual expenditures to budgeted amounts.

What should you do next?

- A. Assign budget models to the budget cycle time spans.
- B. Define the calculation formula for budget funds available, including draft documents.
- C. Specify user groups with permissions to exceed the budget.

Answer: A

Explanation:

After defining financial dimensions, time intervals, and basic budgeting parameters, the next key step in setting up budget control is to assign budget models to the budget cycle time spans.

* This assignment links the budget models (which contain budget register entries and budget plans) to the defined budget cycles and time intervals.

* This linkage enables the system to monitor and compare actual expenditures against the budgeted amounts effectively during the budget control process.

Reference:

Microsoft Docs - Budget control configuration

"Budget models must be assigned to budget cycles to enable budget control monitoring of actual expenditures versus budget." Why other options are not correct:

B (Specify user groups with permissions): Permissions are important but come after budget models and cycles are configured for control.

C (Define calculation formula): The calculation formulas for budget funds are defined after budget models and cycles setup to control funds availability, not the immediate next step.
