During an online meeting, a user's microphone suddenly stops working. The microphone shows as active in the system's sound settings.

What is the most likely cause of this issue?

- A. The microphone needs to be replaced
- B. The microphone is muted in the meeting software
- C. The microphone volume is set too low
- D. There is an issue with the user's internet connection

Answer: B

Explanation:

Correct Answer. B. The microphone is muted in the meeting software If the microphone is active in system settings but not working in a specific application, it is likely muted or improperly configured within that software.

Option A is incorrect. Low volume would reduce sound level but not stop it from working entirely.

Option C is incorrect. An internet connection issue would affect all aspects of the meeting, not just the microphone.

Option D is incorrect. If the microphone shows as active, it is unlikely that the hardware needs replacement.

NEW QUESTION # 607

What is the correct protocol for handling a situation where a technician experiences a mild electrical shock while troubleshooting a laptop?

- A. Take a short break and then resume work if there are no visible injuries
- B. Document the incident, report it according to workplace safety procedures, and seek medical advice

- D. Apply an anti-static wrist strap and continue working on the laptop

Answer: B

Option A is incorrect because ignoring the potential health impact of an electrical shock, regardless of its initial perceived severity, is unsafe.

Option C is incorrect because taking a break does not address the potential health implications of receiving an electrical shock.
