NEW QUESTION # 151

A manufacturer is implementing Dynamics 365 Supply Chain Management with warehouse management processes (WMS). Warehouse workers use hand-held devices to pick and stage batch-tracked products for production. The warehouse manager requires that products are removed from on-hand inventory and consumed when they are picked and staged for production. You need to remove the products from on-hand inventory.

What should you configure?

- A. mobile device menu item, start production order
- B. flushing principle, start
- C. flushing principle, available at location
- D. manufacturing execution, job card device

Answer: C

Explanation:

* The flushing principle is a setting that determines how and when the raw materials are consumed from inventory and registered as work in progress (WIP) for production orders and batch orders1. The flushing principle can be configured at the product level, the bill of materials (BOM) or formula line level, or the production order or batch order line level1.

* The Start flushing principle indicates that the material will be automatically consumed when the production order is started1. The amount of material that is consumed is proportional to the quantity that is started. This principle is relevant if, for example, the variance in the consumption is low, the materials are low-value materials, there are no tracking requirements, or there's a short run time on operations1.

* In this scenario, the warehouse manager requires that products are removed from on-hand inventory and consumed when they are picked and staged for production. Therefore, the Start flushing principle should be configured for the batch-tracked products. This way, the products will be deducted from inventory and set to WIP as soon as the production order is started on the hand-held device.
