IBM MQ v9.4 Administrator - Professional Sample Questions (Q119-Q124):

NEW QUESTION # 119

In IBM MQ environments where high security is mandatory, such as healthcare or government systems, which approach provides the strongest protection by ensuring encrypted communication, authenticated access, and prevention of unauthorized connections?

- A. Using default server channels without additional configuration
- B. Relying only on firewall rules to restrict connections
- C. Enabling TLS/SSL encryption with certificate-based authentication and configuring CHLAUTH rules
- D. Allowing anonymous channel connections but auditing logs frequently

Answer: C

Explanation:

TLS/SSL with certificates and CHLAUTH rules ensures secure encryption, authenticated access, and prevents unauthorized channel connections, making it essential for secure industries.

NEW QUESTION # 120

Which IBM MQ component is specifically designed to manage asynchronous communication between producers and consumers, ensuring that producers do not need to wait for consumers to be available before sending data?

- A. Message Channel Agent
- B. Listener
- C. Application Binding
- D. Queue Manager

Answer: D

Explanation:

The Queue Manager is the central component that enables asynchronous messaging by storing messages until the consumer retrieves them, decoupling producers and consumers.

NEW QUESTION # 121

IBM MQ allows applications to define message properties and use selectors to filter messages at the time of consumption. How does this mechanism improve the efficiency of message processing, and what is the key difference between using selectors and consuming all messages from a queue?

- A. Selectors replicate all messages to multiple queues, ensuring every consumer receives a copy
- B. Selectors encrypt the messages to ensure secure filtering
- C. Selectors enable applications to retrieve only messages that match specified criteria based on message properties, reducing CPU usage and unnecessary message processing compared to consuming all messages
- D. Selectors temporarily store messages in memory for faster delivery

Answer: C

Explanation:

Message selectors allow consumers to process only relevant messages based on properties, which improves application efficiency and prevents unnecessary processing of unrelated messages.

NEW QUESTION # 122

How do IBM MQ channels facilitate reliable communication between queue managers and client applications, and what is the distinction between sender-receiver channels, server-connection channels, and cluster channels in terms of their use cases?

- A. All channel types are identical in function; they differ only in performance optimizations.
- B. Sender-receiver channels connect client applications to queues, server-connection channels connect queue managers, and cluster channels replicate messages across all queues.
- C. Sender-receiver channels enable queue manager-to-queue manager communication, server-connection channels allow client applications to connect remotely to a queue manager, and cluster channels manage message routing within a cluster, ensuring scalability and failover.
- D. Channels only provide monitoring and do not influence message delivery or routing.

Answer: C

Explanation:

MQ channels define communication pathways. Sender-receiver channels are for queue manager links, server-connection channels serve client access, and cluster channels handle routing within clusters for load balancing and high availability.

NEW QUESTION # 123

Which of the following best explains how IBM MQ ensures transactional integrity and prevents data loss when multiple applications are interacting with the same queue and performing message PUT and GET operations concurrently?

- A. By replicating each message across all queue managers
- B. By enforcing exclusive locks on the queue so only one application can access it at a time
- C. By using syncpoint (commit/rollback) mechanisms that treat a series of MQ operations as a single atomic transaction
- D. By allowing all applications to access the queue without coordination

Answer: C

Explanation:

Syncpoint mechanisms ensure that all operations in a transaction either succeed together or fail together, preventing data loss or duplication when multiple applications access the same queue concurrently.
