NEW QUESTION # 132

A senior planner's professional goals include sharpening their project management and presentation skills, training for advancement opportunities, and developing skills as a leader. However, in their current position there are limited opportunities to achieve these professional goals. What is the best way for the planner to continue to prepare for these professional development goals?

- A. Continue to do the best job possible and wait for a promotion
- B. Apply for open positions with other agencies
- C. Create additional planning projects for the community to work on
- D. Attend local networking events and serve on committees in leadership positions

Answer: D

Explanation:

To achieve professional development goals like project management, presentation, and leadership skills, the planner should seek external opportunities to build these skills. Option D (attend networking events and serve on committees in leadership positions) provides exposure to new experiences, skill-building, and leadership roles. The APA's AICP Certification Exam Content Outline (2022), under "Leadership," states, "Planners can develop skills by engaging in professional activities like networking events and committee leadership roles, especially when workplace opportunities are limited." Option A (apply for new positions) is drastic and not necessary for skill-building. Option B (wait for a promotion) is passive and unlikely to address the goals.

Option C (create projects) may not be feasible without authority. The CPC Study Manual (2024) confirms, "Networking and committee leadership roles are effective for developing project management, presentation, and leadership skills," supporting option D.
