- A. Surround the property with brackets: [property]
- B. Surround the property with curly braces and exclamation point: {{property}
- C. Surround the property with an exclamation point and curly braces: {property}
- D. Surround the property with curly braces: {property}

Answer: D

Explanation:
Explanation
The correct syntax to render a property in a Lightning web component template is to surround the property with curly braces: {property}. This syntax allows you to access the property value from the JavaScript class of the component and display it in the HTML template. The other options are incorrect because they either use invalid characters or do not follow the standard syntax for rendering a property in a Lightning web component template. NEW QUESTION # 58
Which three statements are accurate?

- A. An Aura component can contain a Lightning Web Component
- B. An Aura component can contain another Aura component
- C. A Lightning Web Component can contain an Aura component
- D. A Lightning Web Component cannot contain an Aura component

Answer: A,B,D

Explanation:
Salesforce documentation clarifies the interoperability between Aura and Lightning Web Components (LWCs). An Aura component can indeed contain another Aura component, as well as a LWC, allowing for a mix of component technologies in a single application. However, due to the architectural and design principles of LWCs, a LWC cannot contain an Aura component. This is because LWCs are designed to be lightweight and leverage web standards, which makes them not fully compatible with the older Aura component framework in terms of containment.

NEW QUESTION # 59
Which event should be triggered when user facing info, warning or error messages need to be displayed on a Visualforce page?

- A. showMessage
- B. pageMessage
- C. displayPageMessage
- D. displayMessage

Answer: B

Explanation:
The event that should be triggered when user facing info, warning or error messages need to be displayed on a Visualforce page is pageMessage. This event is triggered by the displayPageMessage method of the CCRZ.util class, which is a utility class that provides various helper methods for common tasks. The event can be used to display a message on the page with a specified type, title, and text. For example, CCRZ.util.displayPageMessage('error', 'Oops!', 'Something went wrong.') will trigger the pageMessage event and display an error message on the page. Salesforce References: B2B Commerce and D2C Commerce Developer Guide, Events, Util Class

NEW QUESTION # 60

A developer is working on a storefront that needs to use a sophisticated pricing engine hosted as a service outside the org. Assuming security and trusts have been established, which two actions must the developer take?

- A. Implement the sfdc_checkout.PriceCalculations
- B. Make a call to the service
- C. Implement the sfdc_checkout.CartPriceCalculations
- D. Use External Objects

Answer: A,B

Explanation:
* The correct answer is A and C. To use a sophisticated pricing engine hosted as a service outside the org, the developer must make a call to the service and implement the sfdc_checkout.PriceCalculations interface12. The sfdc_checkout.PriceCalculations interface is a standard interface that defines the methods for calculating prices for a cart or an order1. The developer can use this interface to override the default pricing logic and integrate with an external pricing service12. The developer must also make a call to the external service using Apex REST or SOAP callouts3 and handle the response data accordingly.
* Use External Objects and Implement the sfdc_checkout.CartPriceCalculations are not the correct answers. External objects are a way to access data from external data sources in real time, but they are not suitable for integrating with a pricing service that requires dynamic calculations . The sfdc_checkout.CartPriceCalculations interface is a deprecated interface that was used for calculating prices for a cart only1. It has been replaced by the sfdc_checkout.PriceCalculations interface, which supports both carts and orders1. References:
