NEW QUESTION # 1599
A Project Manager has been contracted by a company to manage the development of a software business application. The Project Manager discovers that five of the software developers are contractors and do not have legal software licenses. What should the Project Manager do in this case?

- A. Call the software vendor
- B. Report this to PMI
- C. Report this to the company's senior management
- D. Fill out a software piracy report

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 1600
A project manager is assigned to a new project team that has several stakeholders who can have significant influence over the project outcomes.
The project manager categorized the stakeholders into four different groups and wants to define the communication strategy.
How should the project manager handle communication?

- A. Describe the four groups in the project stakeholder matrix.
- B. Develop and define a communication strategy for stakeholders.
- C. Define and direct communication to influential stakeholders.
- D. Utilize a uniform communication structure across all groups.

Answer: B

Explanation:
The project manager should develop and define a tailored communication strategy for stakeholders, considering the unique needs and expectations of each group. A uniform communication structure may not address the specific concerns and levels of influence of different stakeholders. By developing a detailed communication plan, the project manager can ensure that all stakeholders are engaged appropriately, with messages and methods of communication that are suited to their level of interest and influence on the project outcomes. This approach aligns with the PMBOK guide's emphasis on the importance of stakeholder engagement and the need for a strategic communication plan that addresses the various ways to communicate with each stakeholder group12. References: The approach is supported by the PMBOK guide, which suggests that the format of communication should depend on the type of stakeholder, and various ways should be tailored to each group1. Additionally, the guide outlines the processes of identifying stakeholders, planning stakeholder engagement, managing stakeholder engagement, and monitoring stakeholder engagement, all of which are crucial for developing an effective communication strategy2.
