NEW QUESTION # 219
Which option would be an example of PII that you need to prevent from leaving your enterprise network?

- A. Credit card number
- B. National security information
- C. A symmetric encryption key
- D. Trade secret

Answer: A

Explanation:

A credit card number is an example of PII that you need to prevent from leaving your enterprise network. PII, or personally identifiable information, is any information that can be used to identify an individual, either alone or in combination with other data. PII can be sensitive or non-sensitive, depending on the level of protection required and the potential harm if exposed. Sensitive PII includes data that can directly identify an individual and cause significant harm if leaked or stolen, such as financial information, medical records, or government-issued ID numbers. Non-sensitive PII includes data that is easily accessible from public sources and does not pose a high risk of identity theft, such as zip code, race, or gender. A credit card number is a sensitive PII because it can be used to access the cardholder's account, make fraudulent transactions, or steal their identity. Therefore, it is important to prevent credit card numbers from leaving the enterprise network, where they could be intercepted by hackers, malicious insiders, or third parties. To protect credit card numbers and other sensitive PII, enterprises should implement data security measures such as encryption, tokenization, masking, access control, auditing, and monitoring. Additionally, enterprises should comply with data privacy laws and standards that regulate the collection, use, and protection of PII, such as the Payment Card Industry Data Security Standard (PCI DSS), the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR), or the California Consumer Privacy Act (CCPA).

NEW QUESTION # 220
Which statement describes DevOps?

- A. DevOps is a culture that unites the Development and Operations teams throughout the software delivery process
- B. DevOps is its own separate team
- C. DevOps is a set of tools that assists the Development and Operations teams throughout the software delivery process
- D. DevOps is a combination of the Development and Operations teams

Answer: A

Explanation:
DevOps is not:
A combination of the Dev and Ops teams: There still are two teams; they just operate in a communicative, collaborative way.
Its own separate team: There is no such thing as a "DevOps engineer." Although some companies may appoint a "DevOps team" as a pilot when trying to transition to a DevOps culture, DevOps refers to a culture where developers, testers, and operations personnel cooperate throughout the entire software delivery lifecycle.
A tool or set of tools: Although there are tools that work well with a DevOps model or help promote DevOps culture, DevOps ultimately is a strategy, not a tool.
Automation: Although automation is very important for a DevOps culture, it alone does not define DevOps.
