(Choose two.)

- A. Vendor audit
- B. Location audit
- C. Stockroom audit
- D. Discovery audit

Answer: A,B

Explanation:

* Inventory audits are the processes of verifying the accuracy and consistency of the hardware asset inventory across the enterprise¹.

* The Hardware Asset Management (HAM) application supports the following types of inventory audits¹:

* Stockroom audit: This is an audit that verifies the quantity and condition of the hardware assets in a stockroom. A stockroom is a physical location where hardware assets are stored before they are delivered to the end users or transferred to another stockroom². A stockroom audit helps to optimize the inventory levels, avoid overstocking or understocking, and identify any discrepancies or issues with the stockroom assets¹.

* Location audit: This is an audit that verifies the presence and status of the hardware assets in a specific location, such as an office, a building, or a floor. A location audit helps to ensure that the hardware assets are assigned to the correct owners, locations, and departments, and to identify any missing, unknown, or unauthorized assets¹.

* Therefore, the types of inventory audits that are also options in the question are A. Stockroom audit and C). Location audit.

* The other options that are not types of inventory audits supported by the HAM application are:

* Vendor audit: This is not a type of inventory audit, but a type of vendor management activity. Vendor management is the process of managing the relationships and contracts with the vendors that provide hardware assets and services to the organization³. Vendor audit is an activity that evaluates the performance, quality, and compliance of the vendor based on predefined criteria and metrics³.

* Discovery audit: This is not a type of inventory audit, but a type of configuration management activity. Configuration management is the process of maintaining the accuracy and consistency of the operational and relationship information of IT assets and services in the Configuration Management Database (CMDB)⁴. Discovery audit is an activity that compares the actual configuration items (CIs) in the IT environment with the expected CIs in the CMDB and identifies any differences or discrepancies⁴.
