- A. `g_form.showFieldMsg()`
- B. `g_form.showFieldMessage()`
- C. `g_form.addInfoMsg()`
- D. `g_form.addInfoMessage()`

Answer: D

Pg 126 of the CAD handbook The method that prints a message on a blue background to the top of the current form by default is `g_form.addInfoMessage()`. The `g_form` object is a global object that provides access to form fields and UI elements on a form. The `addInfoMessage()` method is a method of the `g_form` object that displays an informational message next to the form header. The message has a blue background color by default, unless it is overridden by a CSS style. The `addInfoMessage()` method takes one argument, which is the message text to display. NEW QUESTION # 231

When creating a table in a privately-scoped application, which four Access Controls are created for the table?

- A. Insert, Delete, Query, Update
- B. Create, Delete, Read, Update

- C. Create, Delete, Read, Write
- D. Insert, Delete, Query, Write

Answer: C

Explanation:

When creating a table in a privately-scoped application, four Access Controls are automatically created for the table. These Access Controls define the permissions for the four basic operations on the table: Create, Delete, Read, and Write. The Create operation allows the user to create new records on the table. The Delete operation allows the user to delete existing records on the table. The Read operation allows the user to view the records on the table. The Write operation allows the user to modify the records on the table. By default, these Access Controls grant access to the admin role and the application scope. You can modify or delete these Access Controls as needed.

The other options are not valid Access Controls for a table. Insert, Query, and Update are not operations, but methods of the GlideRecord class that are used to manipulate records on the server-side. They are not part of the Access Control rules.
