Which two enrollment types result in cryptographic separation of organization and personal data on iPhone and iPad devices? (Select two.)

- A. Profile-based Device Enrollment
- B. Automated Device Enrollment
- C. Authenticated Enrollment
- D. Account-driven User Enrollment
- E. Account-driven Device Enrollment

Answer: D,E

Explanation:

Cryptographic separation isolates managed and personal data. The Apple Platform Deployment Guide states, "Account-driven User Enrollment and Account-driven Device Enrollment provide cryptographic separation by isolating managed data (tied to a Managed Apple ID) from personal data (tied to a personal Apple ID)." A creates a managed container, and B extends this to device-level management. Options C, D, and E lack this separation.

NEW QUESTION # 149

In which type of enrollment and ownership model can users personalize apps and data on their managed devices?

- A. Personally enabled, organization-owned
- B. BYOD, organization-owned
- C. Nonpersonalized, organization-owned

Answer: A

Explanation:

The personally enabled, organization-owned model allows organizations to assign devices to individual users while permitting those users to personalize their devices with personal apps and data. This model balances organizational control with user flexibility, often used in one-to-one deployments. BYOD, organization-owned (option A) is a contradictory term; BYOD implies user-owned devices, not organization-owned.

Nonpersonalized, organization-owned (option B) devices are typically locked down for shared or specific use, with no personalization allowed. The Apple Platform Deployment Guide describes the personally enabled model as supporting user customization under MDM management, making C the correct answer.
