NEW QUESTION # 88

Universal Containers has implemented a lead qualification process that uses a lead scoring formula. Upon review, many of the converted leads with the highest scores had little interest in making a purchase.

Which modification to the current lead qualification process should a consultant recommend?

- A. Include a measure for the number of marketing touches.
- B. Evaluate each record against the target marketing persona.
- C. Increase points for actions that indicate intent.

Answer: B

Explanation:

When converted leads with high scores show little interest in purchasing, it indicates that the lead scoring model may not be accurately reflecting true purchase intent. Evaluating each record against the target marketing persona involves comparing the characteristics of the lead to an ideal customer profile, which helps in ensuring that the scoring is more aligned with actual buying intent. By refining the lead qualification process to better match the target persona, sales teams can prioritize leads that are more likely to convert into customers.
