CompTIA Security+ Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q356-Q361):

NEW QUESTION # 356

Which of the following are cases in which an engineer should recommend the decommissioning of a network device? (Select two).

- A. The device is unable to receive authorized updates.
- B. The device's encryption level cannot meet organizational standards.
- C. The device is configured to use cleartext passwords.
- D. The device has been moved from a production environment to a test environment.
- E. The device is moved to an isolated segment on the enterprise network.
- F. The device is moved to a different location in the enterprise.

Answer: B

Explanation:
Explanation
An engineer should recommend the decommissioning of a network device when the device poses a security risk or a compliance violation to the enterprise environment. A device that cannot meet the encryption standards or receive authorized updates is vulnerable to attacks and breaches, and may expose sensitive data or compromise network integrity. Therefore, such a device should be removed from the network and replaced with a more secure and updated one.

NEW QUESTION # 360

A penetration test has demonstrated that domain administrator accounts were vulnerable to pass-the-hash attacks. Which of the following would have been the best strategy to prevent the threat actor from using domain administrator accounts?

- A. Use Group Policy to enforce password expiration.
- B. Implement a privileged access management solution.
- C. Create IDS policies to monitor domain controller access.
- D. Audit each domain administrator account weekly for password compliance.

Answer: B

Explanation:
Detailed Privileged access management (PAM) solutions effectively mitigate pass-the-hash attacks by enforcing least privilege and session management for administrative accounts. These tools restrict how and when credentials can be accessed, thereby reducing attack surfaces.
