NEW QUESTION # 13

When conducting a live Slack training session for a newly formed team in a corporation, what is the most effective way to create an experiential learning environment?

- A. Engage participants in a hands-on workshop where they actively use Slack to collaborate on a simulated project, with real-time guidance and feedback
- B. Provide a lecture on the theoretical aspects of Slack without practical application or user interaction
- C. Have participants observe a demonstration by an expert, without giving them an opportunity to practice themselves
- D. Present a detailed PowerPoint presentation on Slack features without any interactive elements

Answer: A

Explanation:

Engaging participants in a hands-on workshop where they actively use Slack to collaborate on a simulated project is key to experiential learning. This approach allows participants to practically apply what they learn in a real-world context, enhancing their understanding and skills. The addition of real-time guidance and feedback from the instructor further reinforces learning and skill development.

NEW QUESTION # 14

You are in a discovery session with a new client.

Which future deliverable will be most impacted by what you learn about your client's existing support model?

- A. Channel Strategy Session
- B. Governance Session
- C. Grid Design Workshop
- D. Key Messaging

Answer: B

Explanation:

The correct answer is C . A client's existing support model directly affects the Governance Session because governance defines how Slack is administered, who owns specific operational responsibilities, how requests are routed, how issues are escalated, and which roles are accountable for supporting users. If the current support model is centralized through IT, distributed through business-unit admins, handled through a service desk, or managed informally through champions, that structure will shape the recommended admin operating model. Option A, Key Messaging, may be influenced slightly because launch communications should explain where users get help, but messaging is not the primary deliverable affected. Option B, Channel Strategy, may include help channels, but channel naming and structure are only one part of the support model. Option D, Grid Design Workshop, focuses on workspace architecture and access, not the operational support process.

The support model belongs primarily to governance because it determines ownership, escalation, admin responsibilities, and sustainable post-launch operations.
