NEW QUESTION # 231

Which statement accurately describes how IBM MQ handles message prioritization, including how priority values assigned to messages affect the order of delivery, how queues handle messages with different priorities, and the impact on processing efficiency and application performance?

- A. MQ only uses priority for logging and auditing purposes
- B. MQ processes all messages at the same priority and cannot reorder them
- C. MQ ignores message priority and delivers messages in the order they arrive
- D. MQ supports message priority, where messages with higher priority values are delivered before lower priority ones, improving processing efficiency for critical messages

Answer: D

Explanation:

IBM MQ allows assigning priority values to messages. Higher priority messages are delivered first, ensuring critical messages are processed promptly, while lower-priority messages wait their turn.

- B. Use of dynamic queues with automatic cleanup
- C. Ephemeral message publication with replay options
- D. Multi-instance queue managers with shared storage

Answer: D

- B. Configuring application-side logging without using MQ-specific monitoring tools
- C. Using MQSC commands for manual queue checks and occasional log review
- D. Only monitoring CPU and memory usage on the queue manager server

Answer: A

Explanation:

MQ Explorer with automated alerts and prioritization provides proactive monitoring to detect bottlenecks, manage backlogs, and ensure high-priority message delivery efficiently.

- A. Persistent messaging with confirmation of delivery
- B. Queue managers configured with high availability
- C. Non-persistent messaging for faster throughput

- D. Transactions with commit and rollback support

Answer: A

Explanation:

Persistent messaging in IBM MQ ensures that messages are stored safely on disk and can survive system crashes, guaranteeing reliable delivery to consuming applications.
