NEW QUESTION # 85
You have a Deployment for a web application named 'web-app-deployment' that uses an image named 'web-app:vl .0'. You want to implement a rolling update to upgrade the deployment to a new version, 'web-app:v2.0', but only allow a maximum of 2 pods to be unavailable at any time during the update. How would you achieve this using Kubernetes?

Answer:

Explanation:
See the solution below with Step by Step Explanation.
Explanation:
Solution (Step by Step) :
1. Update the Deployment YAML:
- Open the Deployment YAML file for 'web-app-deployment' (e.g., 'web-app-deployment.yaml').
- Modify the 'image' field within the 'spec.template.spec.containers' section to the new image: 'web-app:v2.0'.
- Adjust the 'strategy.rollingUpdate' section to control the rolling update process:
- Set 'maxUnavailable: 2' to allow a maximum of 2 pods to be unavailable at any time.
- Keep 'maxSurge: 0' if you don't want additional pods to be created during the update.
□
2. Apply the Updated Deployment: - IJse 'kubectl apply -f web-app-deployment.yaml' to apply the updated Deployment YAML.
3. Monitor the Rolling Update: - Use 'kubectl get pods -l app=web-app' to monitor the update process. You will see that Kubernetes will gradually terminate old pods running 'web-app:vl .0' and create new pods with 'web-app:v2.0'. - You can also use "kubectl describe deployment web-app-deployment' to observe the progress of the rolling update. 4. Verify Successful Update: -

Once the update is complete, confirm that all pods are running the new image 'web-app:v2.0'. You can check the output of 'kubectl get pods -l app=web-app' or 'kubectl describe deployment web-app-deployment'.
