ISTQB Certified Tester Foundation Level (CTFL v4.0) Sample Questions (Q334-Q339):

NEW QUESTION # 334

Testing Quadrants, as a model, is effective in aligning stakeholders within Agile teams. Which of the following examples demonstrates this?

- A. Using Testing Quadrants, the test manager is able to communicate potential product risk to all stakeholders.
- B. Using Testing Quadrants, the test manager is able to measure and communicate test coverage to all stakeholders.
- C. Using Testing Quadrants, the test manager is able to differentiate and describe the types of tests to all stakeholders.
- D. Using Testing Quadrant, the test manager is able to prioritize defects by linking these to a specific type of test.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The Testing Quadrants model helps Agile teams by categorizing different types of tests and their purposes.

This differentiation helps test managers explain the testing strategy to all stakeholders, ensuring everyone understands the scope and objectives of each test type. This model aids in planning, executing, and tracking testing activities across different quadrants, making it easier to align with stakeholders' expectations and project goals. NEW QUESTION # 335

Which of the following is the main benefit of a configuration management of testware?

- A. All testware items are identified, version controlled, tracked for changes with relation to each other
- B. There is an easy way to assess the level to test coverage provided by the existing tests
- C. All testware is backed up with restore option, including incident reports and change requests. B. The testware can be traced to information in requirements tools and to the bug tracking system.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Configuration management of testware is a critical aspect of maintaining the integrity and traceability of test assets throughout the testing lifecycle. The main benefit of configuration management is to ensure that all testware items, such as test cases, test scripts, test data, and test results, are systematically identified, version controlled, and tracked for changes in relation to each other.

Option C accurately describes this benefit. By applying configuration management principles to testware, teams can manage changes to test assets efficiently, ensuring that the testware remains consistent, up-to-date, and aligned with the version of the software under test. This control mechanism facilitates the reproducibility of tests, enhances the reliability of testing activities, and supports traceability from requirements through to defects.

Options A, B, and D describe other aspects of test management and testing processes but do not capture the core benefit of configuration management of testware, which is centered on the systematic control and tracking of testware items.

NEW QUESTION # 336

The acceptance criteria associated with a user story:

- A. are often written in a rule-oriented format using the template referred to as "Given/When/Then"
- B. are often documented following in rule-oriented format using the following template: "As a [role], I want [feature], so that I can [benefit]"
- C. must be written in one of the two following formats: scenario-oriented or rule-oriented
- D. can be written in different formats and represent an aspect of a user story referred to as confirmation' of the so called "3 C's"

Answer: D

Explanation:

The acceptance criteria associated with a user story are the conditions that must be met for the user story to be considered done and to deliver the expected value to the user. They are often written in different formats, such as rule-oriented, scenario-oriented, or table-oriented, depending on the nature and complexity of the user story. They represent an aspect of a user story referred to as confirmation, which is one of the so called "3 C's" of user stories. The other two aspects are card and conversation. Card refers to the concise and informal description of the user story, usually following the template: "As a [role], I want [feature], so that I can [benefit]". Conversation refers to the ongoing dialogue between the stakeholders and the team members to clarify and refine the user story and its acceptance criteria. Therefore, option C is the correct answer.

NEW QUESTION # 337

A Static analysis tool analyzes a given program's CONTROL FLOW among other things. Which of the following options represents the most likely outcome of the control flow analysis:

- A. Number of comment lines
- B. Number of source code lines
- C. Identification of unreachable code
- D. Report on adherence to the coding standards

Answer: C

Explanation:

A static analysis tool is a tool that analyzes a given program's source code or executable code without executing it. A static analysis tool can perform various types of analysis on a program's code, such as syntax checking, data flow analysis, control flow analysis, complexity measurement, coding standards compliance checking, etc. Control flow analysis is a type of analysis that examines how a program's statements are executed in different paths or branches. One of the most likely outcomes of control flow analysis is identification of unreachable code, which is code that can never be executed due to logical errors or design flaws. Unreachable code can reduce readability and maintainability of the code, as well as increase complexity and size. The other options are not outcomes of control flow analysis, but rather outcomes of other types of analysis. Report on adherence to coding standards is an outcome of coding standards compliance checking.

Number of comment lines and number of source code lines are outcomes of complexity measurement.

NEW QUESTION # 338

A test status report SHOULD:

- A. Always be based on the same template within an organisation, as its structure and contents should not be affected by the audience to which the report is presented.
- B. Specify the lines of communication between testing, other lifecycle activities, and within the organisation that were chosen at the outset of the test project.
- C. Specify the impediments to carrying out the planned test activities in the reporting period and the corresponding solutions put in place to remove them
- D. Be produced as part of test completion activities and report unmitigated product risks to support the decision whether or not to release the product

Answer: C

Explanation:

A test status report is a document that provides a snapshot of the testing activities and their progress during a particular period. It should include information about any impediments encountered during the test execution and the actions taken to resolve them, which helps stakeholders understand the challenges and how they were addressed .

Option B describes an activity related to test completion rather than ongoing status reporting. Option C is incorrect because the structure and contents of the report may vary based on the audience's needs. Option D, while important, is not the primary purpose of a test status report, which focuses more on the current status and impediments.
