- B. After running the backup data export manually for 2 weeks, the administrator can schedule this job to run weekly every Sunday to review the file on Mondays at the start of the week for data comparisons/analysis.
- C. As a dry run, the administrator can test this process via a data export request from the primary sandbox to the existing Sales Cloud UE org.
- D. The administrator can ask the business manager on the investment bank team to review the file directly.

Answer: A

Explanation:

As part of the preparation for the data migration process, the administrator should run a daily backup data export for a week, then continue to run this job weekly until they are ready for data migration. This is a best practice for data migration in Salesforce that allows the administrator to identify the data they want to migrate, create templates for the data, prepare the destination org, and validate the data. By running a daily backup data export for a week, the administrator can capture any changes or updates in the data and compare them with previous exports. By continuing to run this job weekly until they are ready for data migration, the administrator can ensure that they have the most recent and accurate data to migrate into Financial Services Cloud.
