NEW QUESTION # 156

You need to add an existing table to the solution?

- A. Include all views
- B. Select data
- C. Include all components
- D. Select views
- E. Select components
- F. Include table metadata

Answer: C,E,F

Explanation:

When you add an existing table to the solution, you have several options: Include all components (Number 2), Include table metadata (Number 3), Select components (Number 1). You can also include no components or metadata when not checking boxes or selecting components.

The solution is a file (container) that can include various components, like tables, fields, apps, site maps, flows, etc.

These components are extensions or/and modifications of the Dataverse database. Every Dataverse environment has a set of default tables. If you modify or extend the Dataverse table, you don't need to include the existing table in a solution but only modifications and customizations.

Microsoft recommends such an approach and calls it Segmented solutions.

Power Platform will add minimal information about the table if you don't include any table assets or metadata.

If you distribute the unmanaged solution, the best way to bring a table to another environment is to include all components. Besides all table components, this option also consists of the table metadata and can consist of other tables or business process flows, reports, connections, etc.

The table metadata option includes only the table properties, like auditing, duplicate detection, or change tracking.

When deploying the solution update, you need to select only table components, like columns, relationships, business rules, views, etc., that you added or modified, such as a new table column or new form.
