Cloudera CDP Data Engineer - Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q244-Q249):

NEW QUESTION # 244

In the context of Cloudera's Optimization Framework, what role does data statistics collection play?

- A. It helps the optimizer make informed decisions about data layout and query execution plans
- B. It reduces the need for data compression
- C. It provides metadata for security enforcement
- D. It is used to generate more data

Answer: A

Explanation:

Collecting data statistics (like row counts, data distribution, and column cardinality) is crucial for the optimizer. It uses these statistics to make informed decisions about the most efficient way to execute queries, including data layout and choosing the best execution plan.

NEW QUESTION # 245

In an Airflow DAG, you have tasks A, B, C, and D. Task A must complete before B and C can start, but B and C can run in parallel. Task D should only run once both B and C have completed. How do you set up these dependencies?

- A. `A.set_downstream([B, C])` and `set_upstream([B, C])`
- B. `A]] B ]] C]] D`
- C. `A]] B, C]] D`
- D. `[A ]] B, A]] C] and [B, C ]] D`

Answer: D

Explanation:

Option C correctly sets up the dependencies as described. By using `[A ]] B, A ]] C]`, it establishes that Task A must complete before either Task B or C can start, allowing B and C to run in parallel. The notation `[B, C ]] D` ensures that Task D will only start after both Tasks B and C have completed. This approach directly models the dependency requirements. Options A and B incorrectly imply sequential execution or improper grouping, while D, although functionally similar to C, is less commonly used for expressing dependencies in modern Airflow code, where the bitshift operators (`]]`, `]]]`) are preferred for clarity.

NEW QUESTION # 246

You need to design an Airflow DAG that waits for a specific file to become available before proceeding with the downstream tasks. How can you achieve this dependency?

- A. Use the File sensor operator to check for the file's existence and trigger downstream tasks upon its arrival.
- B. Schedule the DAG to run periodically, hoping the file becomes available eventually.
- C. Implement a custom loop within a Python operator to continuously check for the file until it appears.
- D. Configure the source system to notify Airflow when the file is ready for processing.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The File sensor operator specifically addresses the need to wait for a file before proceeding in an Airflow DAG. Option A ensures that the downstream tasks only start after the desired file is present.

NEW QUESTION # 247

When analyzing an Explain Plan, what does the presence of a large number of "Nested Loop Joins" indicate about a query's potential performance?

- A. It may indicate potential performance issues for large datasets due to the high computational cost
- B. It suggests that the query is fully optimized for distributed execution
- C. It guarantees optimal performance for all dataset sizes
- D. It implies that the data is perfectly partitioned for the query

Answer: A

Explanation:

The presence of a large number of "Nested Loop Joins" in an Explain Plan can indicate potential performance issues, especially for large datasets.

Nested Loop Joins can be very CPU-intensive and inefficient for large datasets as they involve comparing every row in the first table with every row in the second table.

NEW QUESTION # 248

Your Spark application on Kubernetes requires a secure connection to a database. You've stored the database password in Kubernetes Secrets. How would you typically access this secret in your PySpark application?

- A. By using a ConfigMap
- B. By reading the secret file from a volume mount
- C. By querying the Kubernetes API
- D. Through an external secrets manager

Answer: B

Explanation:

Kubernetes Secrets can be mounted as volumes and accessed within the pod. In a PySpark application, you can read these secrets from the mounted path, making it a secure way to access sensitive information like database passwords.
