The Ultimate Guide to AD0-E407 Adobe Target Architect Master

AD0-E407 Adobe Target Architect Master Certification Exam Credential. A first step is to document the basis information which you need to know before you can start testing:

The architecture of your test environment

An application map detailing the internal elements which will need testing (both in isolation and combination)

Test Architecture

You should clearly document the architecture of the test environment being used for your performance testing.

You will need a reproduction of your planned production Publish environment, together with Dispatcher and Load Balancer.

Application Map

To get a clear overview you can create a map of the entire application (you may well have this from tests on the Author environment).

A diagram representation of the internal elements of the application, can give an overview of the testing requirements; with color-coding it can also act as a basis for reporting.

Scope Definition

An application will usually have a selection of use cases. Some will be very important, others less so.

To focus the scope of the performance testing on publish, we recommend that you define the:

The number of use cases is up to you, but it should be limited to an easily manageable number (e.g. between 5 to 10).

Once the key use cases have been selected, then the key performance indicators (KPI) and the tools used to measure them can be defined for each case. Examples of common KPIs include:
