Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 27

An organization's customers are experiencing either slower network communication or unavailability of services. In addition, network administrators are receiving alerts from security tools such as IDS/IPS and firewalls about a possible DoS/DDoS attack. In result, the organization requests the incident handling and response (IH&R) team further investigates the incident. The IH&R team decides to use manual techniques to detect DoS/DDoS attack.

Which of the following commands helps the IH&R team to manually detect DoS/DDoS attack?

- A. nbtstat/S
- B. nbtstat /c

- C. netstat -r
- D. netstat an

Answer: D

Explanation:

The netstat -an command is used to display network connections, routing tables, and a number of network interface statistics. It is particularly useful for identifying unusual volumes of traffic to and from a system, which can be indicative of a DoS/DDoS attack. The option -a shows all active connections and the TCP and UDP ports on which the computer is listening, and -n displays addresses and port numbers in numerical form.

This can help the incident handling and response (IH&R) team to identify suspicious patterns, such as a large number of connections from a single source or to a specific port, which are common during DoS/DDoS attacks.

References: The Certified Incident Handler (ECIH v3) program from EC-Council teaches incident handlers about various manual and automated techniques to detect and respond to incidents, including the use of system and network commands like netstat -an for identifying signs of DoS/DDoS attacks.
