Microsoft GitHub Advanced Security Sample Questions (Q64-Q69):

NEW QUESTION # 64

Which two pieces of information should be included in a security advisory?

- A. Product affected and severity.
- B. Severity and exposure list.
- C. Administrator name and severity.
- D. Exposures list and administrator name.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 65

Where can you view code scanning results from CodeQL analysis?

- A. the repository's code scanning alerts
- B. at Security advisories
- C. a CodeQL database
- D. a CodeQL query pack

Answer: A

Explanation:

You can use CodeQL to identify vulnerabilities and errors in your code. The results are shown as code scanning alerts in GitHub.

Note:

Viewing the alerts for a repository

You need write permission to view a summary of all the alerts for a repository on the Security tab.

By default, the code scanning alerts page is filtered to show alerts for the default branch of the repository only.

1. On GitHub, navigate to the main page of the repository.
2. Under the repository name, click Security. If you cannot see the "Security" tab, select the dropdown menu, and then click Security.
3. In the left sidebar, click Code scanning.
4. Optionally, use the free text search box or the dropdown menus to filter alerts. For example, you can filter by the tool that was used to identify alerts.

Code scanning

The screenshot shows the GitHub Code Scanning interface. At the top, there is a status bar indicating 'All tools are working as expected' and 'Tool status 2'. Below this is a search bar with the filter 'is:open branch:main'. Underneath the search bar, there are filters for '3,012 Open' and '28 Closed', along with dropdown menus for 'Language', 'Tool', 'Rule', 'Severity', and 'Sort'. The main content area displays a list of alerts. The first alert is 'Uncontrolled command line' with a 'Critical' severity, detected by CodeQL in 'backend/backend.py:72' on the 'main' branch. The alert was opened 2 years ago.

5. Etc.

NEW QUESTION # 66

Where can you use CodeQL analysis for code scanning? (Each answer presents part of the solution. Choose two.)

- A. In a workflow
- B. In an external continuous integration (CI) system
- C. In a third-party Git repository
- D. In the Files changed tab of the pull request

Answer: A,B

Explanation:

In a workflow: GitHub Actions workflows are the most common place for CodeQL code scanning. The codeql-analysis.yml defines how the analysis runs and when it triggers.

In an external CI system: GitHub allows you to run CodeQL analysis outside of GitHub Actions. Once complete, the results can be uploaded using the upload-sarif action to make alerts visible in the repository.

You cannot run or trigger analysis from third-party repositories directly, and the Files changed tab in pull requests only shows diff - not analysis results.

NEW QUESTION # 67

What is the first step you should take to fix an alert in secret scanning?

- A. Revoke the alert if the secret is still valid.
- B. Update your dependencies.
- C. Remove the secret in a commit to the main branch.
- D. Archive the repository.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Resolving alerts from secret scanning

After reviewing the details of a secret scanning alert, you should fix and then close the alert.

Fixing alerts

Once a secret has been committed to a repository, you should consider the secret compromised.

GitHub recommends the following actions for compromised secrets:

Verify that the secret committed to GitHub is valid.

Review and update any services that use the old token. For GitHub personal access tokens, delete the compromised token and create a new token.

Depending on the secret provider, check your security logs for any unauthorized activity.

NEW QUESTION # 68

What is a security policy?

- A. An automatic detection of security vulnerabilities and coding errors in new or modified code
- B. A file in a GitHub repository that provides instructions to users about how to report a security vulnerability
- C. A security alert issued to a community in response to a vulnerability
- D. An alert about dependencies that are known to contain security vulnerabilities

Answer: B

Explanation:

A security policy is defined by a SECURITY.md file in the root of your repository or .github/ directory. This file informs contributors and security researchers about how to responsibly report vulnerabilities. It improves your project's transparency and ensures timely communication and mitigation of any reported issues.

Adding this file also enables a "Report a vulnerability" button in the repository's Security tab.
