NEW QUESTION # 233

An internal audit activity implemented an integrated test facility to test payroll processing. The auditors identified the key controls and processing steps built into the computer program and developed test data to test them. The auditors submitted test transactions throughout the year and did not find any differences in their test results. The auditors can conclude that:

- A. The system is properly capturing the hours worked by employees during the year and the hours have been properly submitted to payroll and processed correctly.
- B. All of the above.
- C. The computer application and its control procedures were processing payroll transactions correctly during the past year.
- D. All employees were correctly paid during the year and their pay was correctly computed.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 234

During a routine audit of a customer service hotline, an internal auditor noticed that an unusually high number of customer complaints pertained to payments not being applied to the customers' accounts.

Which of the following would most likely be the reason for the high volume of complaints?

- A. Check tampering by an employee.
- B. Submission of fraudulent expense reports.
- C. Poor controls in the invoice approval processes.
- D. An ineffective customer service department.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 235

In which of the following populations would the internal auditor most likely choose to use a stratified sampling approach?

- A. Inventory comprised of the same items stored in different warehouses
- B. Revenue that is earned by an organization through cash receipts or as receivable.
- C. Batches of materials that must be confirmed as meeting quality standards
- D. Tax reports submitted to meet the requirements of the local taxation authority

Answer: B

Explanation:

Stratified sampling is used when the population can be divided into distinct subgroups (strata) that differ significantly from each other but are internally homogeneous. In the context of auditing, revenue earned through cash receipts or as receivables would have different characteristics and risk profiles. Stratifying the population allows the auditor to ensure that each subgroup is adequately represented in the sample, leading to more reliable and accurate audit conclusions.
