APICS Certified Supply Chain Professional Sample Questions (Q559-Q564):

NEW QUESTION # 559

Which of the following metrics is typically the most appropriate measure of product and service quality?

- A. Customer perception
- B. Warranty claims
- C. Internal inspection
- D. Product performance

Answer: A

Explanation:

Customer perception is a crucial measure of product and service quality because it directly reflects the customer's experience and satisfaction with the product or service. Unlike internal inspections or product performance metrics, which are internally focused, customer perception captures the end-user's viewpoint.

This includes aspects such as the product's ability to meet customer needs, reliability, ease of use, and overall satisfaction. Customer feedback, surveys, and reviews are common methods used to gauge customer perception and assess quality.

NEW QUESTION # 560

A benefit of using radio frequency identification (RFID) instead of bar coding would be:

- A. the ability to read multiple items
- B. decreased cycle count requirements
- C. the ability to locate an individual item in a warehouse
- D. lower cost

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 561

In the analysis of costs, fixed costs are those that are:

- A. dependent on the utilization of the asset.
- B. constant through the useful life of the asset.
- C. inversely proportionate to the volume of output.
- D. independent of the volume of output.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Fixed costs are those expenses that remain constant regardless of the volume of output produced. These costs do not fluctuate with changes in production levels, making them independent of output volume. Examples of fixed costs include rent, salaries, and insurance. They are incurred even when production levels are zero. Fixed costs are not dependent on asset utilization, inversely proportionate to output, or constant through the useful life of the asset but are instead constant in relation to production volume.

NEW QUESTION # 562

In a service environment, a decrease in demand over the long term will most likely result in:

- A. Increased cycle time.
- B. increased cost of service
- C. decreased cycle time.
- D. decreased cost of service.

Answer: B

Explanation:

In a service environment, a long-term decrease in demand can lead to increased costs of service due to several factors:

* Fixed Costs: Many service environments have high fixed costs (e.g., facilities, equipment) that do not decrease with lower demand, leading to higher per-unit costs.

* Economies of Scale: Lower demand can result in the loss of economies of scale, as the cost per unit

* increases when services are spread over a smaller number of customers.

* Resource Utilization: Decreased demand can lead to underutilization of resources (e.g., staff, infrastructure), further driving up the cost per service unit.

NEW QUESTION # 563

Which of the following strategies can be used to help mitigate negative effects of events that rarely occur?

- A. Continuous replenishment
- B. Adaptive supply chain community
- C. Global optimization
- D. Revenue-sharing contract

Answer: B

Explanation:

An adaptive supply chain community strategy involves creating a network of supply chain partners that can quickly adjust and respond to unexpected events or disruptions. This strategy focuses on flexibility, collaboration, and information sharing among all members of the supply chain to ensure rapid and effective responses to rare and unforeseen events. Unlike other strategies like revenue-sharing contracts, global optimization, or continuous replenishment, which are more suited for predictable and routine scenarios, an adaptive supply chain community is specifically designed to handle high-uncertainty situations by leveraging the collective agility and resilience of the network.
