NEW QUESTION # 250

Clearing Corporations are required to conduct various tests to ensure the adequacy of the Core SGF. What is the specific purpose of the 'Reverse Stress Test' as defined in the risk management framework?

- A. To test the operational capability of the backup disaster recovery site.
- B. To calculate the historical volatility of the most liquid securities over the past 5 years.
- C. To determine the daily settlement price of illiquid futures contracts.
- D. To identify under which market conditions and scenarios the combination of margins, Core SGF, and other financial resources would prove insufficient.
- E. To validate the accuracy of the software used for margin calculation.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The source defines Reverse stress test as: 'CC shall periodically carry out reverse stress tests designed to identify under which market conditions and under what scenarios the combination of its margins, Core SGF and other financial resources prove insufficient to meet its obligations'.

NEW QUESTION # 251

In the context of the beta version of the T+0 rolling settlement cycle, how is the applicable price band for a security determined and managed relative to the regular T+1 market?

- A. It is set at +1- 1% of the previous day's closing price and remains static throughout the trading session 09:15 AM to 3:30 PM.
- B. It operates with a price band of +50 basis points from the opening price of the T+0 market, without any re-calibration during the session.
- C. It operates with a price band of +100 basis points from the price in the regular T+1 market, re-calibrated after every 50 basis points movement in the underlying T+1 market.
- D. It mirrors the dynamic price band of the T+1 market exactly, flexing only when the T+1 market hits its circuit limit.
- E. It operates with a fixed price band of +/- 5% irrespective of the movement in the T+1 market.

Answer: C

Explanation:

According to the operational details for T+0 settlement, the price in the T+0 segment will operate with a price band of +100 basis points from the price in the regular T+1 market. This band will be re-calibrated after every 50 basis points movement in the underlying T+1 market.
