NEW QUESTION # 121

Which of the following is not an Input to delivering the capability?

- A. Project outputs
- B. Blueprint
- C. Project dossier
- D. Business Case

Answer: A

Explanation:

Project outputs are actually the output of delivering the capability, not an input. Inputs to delivering the capability include the Project Dossier, Business Case, and Blueprint, which provide the framework, justification, and detailed design for what is to be delivered. The MSP Practitioner clarifies: "Project outputs are output of delivering the capability," meaning these are the tangible products or deliverables produced by the projects managed within the programme. In contrast, the Project Dossier contains detailed descriptions and plans for the projects, the Business Case justifies the programme's existence and value, and the Blueprint defines the future state and capabilities required.

This distinction is important because delivering the capability depends on having a clear, approved vision (Blueprint), a solid business justification (Business Case), and a structured project plan (Project Dossier).

Only once these inputs are in place can project outputs be successfully created and integrated to achieve the programme's objectives.

Understanding this flow ensures that programme teams focus on the correct artefacts at each stage-inputs for planning and delivery, outputs for realization and benefits management-ensuring clarity and control throughout the transformational flow.
