ISQI ISTQB Certified Tester Foundation Level (CTFL) v4.0 Sample Questions (Q68-Q73):

NEW QUESTION # 68

In addition to thorough testing of the requirements specification, a development team aims to involve users as early as possible in the development process, using practices such as prototyping, to ensure that the software systems being developed will meet the users' expectations. This approach is especially useful at mitigating the risks associated with one of the seven testing principles, which one?

- A. Working software over comprehensive documentation
- B. Tests wear out
- C. Defects cluster together
- D. Absence-of-errors fallacy

Answer: D

Explanation:

The absence-of-errors fallacy is one of the seven testing principles mentioned in the ISTQB syllabus. This principle states that even if no defects are found in the software, it does not guarantee that the software is usable and meets the user needs and expectations. By involving users early in the development process through practices like prototyping, the team can gather feedback to ensure that the software aligns with user expectations, thereby addressing the risk of this fallacy.

NEW QUESTION # 69

A typical objective of testing is to ensure that:

- A. testing is used to drive the development of a software
- B. a software has been tested using a combination of test techniques
- C. a software has been properly covered
- D. there are no defects in a software that is about to be released

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

This answer is correct because a typical objective of testing is to ensure that a software has been tested using a combination of test techniques, such as black-box, white-box, or experience-based techniques, that are appropriate for the test objectives, test levels, and test types. Testing using a combination of test techniques can increase the effectiveness and efficiency of testing, as different techniques can target different aspects of the software quality, such as functionality, usability, performance, security, reliability, etc. Testing using a combination of test techniques can also reduce the risk of missing defects that could be detected by one technique but not by another. NEW QUESTION # 70

What does the "absence-of-defects fallacy" refer to in software development?

- A. A misconception that software verification is unnecessary
- B. The need for constant system quality assurance and improvements.
- C. The belief that thoroughly testing all requirements guarantees system success.
- D. The idea that fixing defects is NOT important to meeting user needs.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The "absence-of-defects fallacy" in software development refers to the mistaken belief that if a software system has been thoroughly tested and all requirements have been met without any defects, it guarantees the success of the system. However, this is not necessarily true. Even if no defects are found, the system might still fail to meet the user's needs or business objectives. This fallacy highlights the importance of validation in addition to verification to ensure that the system fulfills the intended use and requirements.

NEW QUESTION # 71

The whole-team approach:

- A. promotes the idea that all team members should be responsible for the quality of the product
- B. is mostly adopted in projects aimed at developing safety-critical systems, as it ensures the highest level of testing independence
- C. is a consensus-based approach that engages the whole team in estimating the user stories
- D. promotes the idea that all team members should have a thorough understanding of test techniques

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation

This answer is correct because the whole-team approach is a way of working in agile projects where all team members share the responsibility for the quality of the product, and collaborate on delivering value to the customer. The whole-team approach involves testers, developers, business analysts, product owners, and other stakeholders in planning, designing, developing, testing, and delivering the product. The whole-team approach fosters communication, feedback, learning, and continuous improvement within the team. - A. Statements I, III, and IV
- B. Statements II, III, and V
- C. Statements II, IV, and V
- D. Statements I, II, and IV
