- B. Online transaction processing system

- B. It allows for detailed coding and programming.
- C. It requires extensive resources and time to create.
- D. It can quickly communicate a solution.

Answer: D

Explanation:
Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:
In rapid design challenges, hackathons, or design sprints, a storyboard is used as a fast, visual way to communicate a potential solution. It typically consists of a sequence of frames or panels that show:
The user's journey through a product or service.
The key steps or screens involved in solving a problem.
The context in which the user interacts with the system.
This makes storyboards ideal when teams need to:
Quickly share ideas across stakeholders without building a full prototype.
Build a shared understanding of how the solution should work.
Gather early feedback before investing time in detailed design or development.
In a rapid design challenge, time and resources are limited, so the main advantage is that a storyboard can quickly communicate a solution in a clear, visual way.
Why the other options are incorrect:
B . It requires extensive resources and time to create.Storyboards are intentionally lightweight and quick to create; this is the opposite of their purpose in rapid design.
C . It allows for detailed coding and programming.Storyboards are conceptual and visual, not a medium for coding or technical implementation.
D . It can be used to finalize the product design.A storyboard is a preliminary design tool; it supports ideation and early validation, not final product specifications.
