NEW QUESTION # 373

The process of gathering data about what customers need and ensuring that desired features are included in the design and initial planning phase of a new product or service is known as:

- A. early supplier involvement.
- B. a quick response program.
- C. total quality management.
- D. quality function deployment.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Quality Function Deployment (QFD) is a systematic process for gathering customer requirements and ensuring they are incorporated into the design and planning of a new product or service. Here's how it works:

* Customer Voice: QFD begins with collecting and understanding customer needs and expectations, often referred to as the "voice of the customer."

* House of Quality: These needs are translated into design requirements through a tool called the House of Quality, which helps prioritize features based on customer importance.

* Cross-Functional Teams: QFD involves cross-functional teams to ensure that all relevant perspectives (e.g., marketing, engineering, manufacturing) are considered in the design process.

* Integration: The process ensures that customer needs are systematically integrated into product design, reducing the risk of missing key features or quality attributes.

QFD is thus a comprehensive approach to ensuring that customer needs are central to product development from the outset.

NEW QUESTION # 375

A role-based entry into a company's system that aggregates all required sources of information into a single environment is known as:

- A. an extranet.
- B. a hub.
- C. a local area network (LAN).
- D. a portal.

Answer: D

Explanation:

A portal in the context of supply chain and business systems is a role-based entry that aggregates all necessary sources of information into a single environment. It provides users with personalized and secure access to relevant data, applications, and services needed for their role within the organization. This centralized access point simplifies information retrieval and improves productivity by ensuring that employees can easily find and use the data they need to perform their duties efficiently.
