NEW QUESTION # 88
How can defense in depth be achieved via security zones?

- A. By having zones that separate sensors from actuators, that provide layered security
- B. By having zones that are connected via conduits using the latest version of SSL

- C. By having a zone edge that is using the security policies of the asset owner
- D. By having zones within zones, or subzones, that provide layered security

Answer: D

Explanation:
ISA/IEC 62443 defines "defense in depth" as a layered approach to security. This can be accomplished by implementing zones within zones (sometimes called subzones), where each zone or subzone provides an additional security barrier or control layer. This segmentation restricts an attacker's ability to move laterally and ensures that compromise of one zone does not automatically result in compromise of the entire system.
