NEW QUESTION # 243

The command `cat /proc/dma` will show you what?

- A. Which DMA channels are in use
- B. Whether DMA is enabled
- C. Which DMA mode is in use
- D. General information about DMA on the machine

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 244

Which command is used in a Linux environment to create a new directory? (Specify ONLY the command without any path or parameters.)

- A. `mkdir`
- B. `/usr/bin/mkdir`

Answer: A

Explanation:

The `mkdir` command is used in a Linux environment to create a new directory. The `mkdir` command takes one or more arguments that specify the name and path of the directory to be created. For example, `mkdir foo` will create a directory named `foo` in the current working directory, while `mkdir /home/bar` will create a directory named `bar` in the `/home` directory. The `mkdir` command can also create multiple directories at once by using the `-p` option, which creates any missing parent directories along the path. For example, `mkdir -p /tmp/a/b`

`/c` will create the directories `/tmp`, `/tmp/a`, `/tmp/a/b` and `/tmp/a/b/c` if they do not exist already. References:
