A template for requirements that provides fields to be filled in is called:

- A. Document template
- B. Form template
- C. Phrase template
- D. All the other options are wrong.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:

CPRE distinguishes three template types. Phrase templates define a sentence pattern for individual requirements (e.g., condition-subject-action-object). Document templates give the overall structure of a document (sections, headings, mandatory content). Form templates present a form with labeled fields-such as ID, description, rationale, priority, source-to be completed for each requirement.
