In Azure OpenAI Service, the temperature parameter directly controls the creativity and determinism of responses generated by models such as GPT-3.5. According to the Microsoft Learn documentation for Azure OpenAI models, temperature is a numeric value (typically between 0.0 and 2.0) that determines how

"random" or "deterministic" the output should be.

* A lower temperature value (for example, 0 or 0.2) makes the model's responses more deterministic, meaning the same prompt consistently produces nearly identical outputs.

* A higher temperature value (for example, 0.8 or 1.0) encourages creativity and variety, causing the model to generate different phrasing or interpretations each time it responds.

When a question specifies the need for more deterministic responses, Microsoft's guidance is to decrease the temperature parameter. This adjustment makes the model focus on the most probable tokens (words) rather than exploring less likely options, improving reliability and consistency-ideal for business or technical applications where consistent answers are essential.

The other parameters serve different purposes:

* Frequency penalty reduces repetition of the same phrases but does not control randomness.

* Max response (max tokens) limits the maximum length of the generated output.

* Stop sequence defines specific tokens that tell the model when to stop generating text.

Thus, the correct and Microsoft-verified completion is:

"You can modify the Temperature parameter to produce more deterministic responses from a chat solution that uses the Azure OpenAI GPT-3.5 model."
