SailPoint Certified IdentityIQ Associate Exam Sample Questions (Q74-Q79):

NEW QUESTION # 74

Is this an accurate statement about the selection of a connector as part of an application definition?
Some connectors contain a predefined account schema.

- A. Yes
- B. No

Answer: A

Explanation:

Yes. In SailPoint IdentityIQ, some application connectors include predefined schema information because the structure of accounts and groups on those target systems is well known to the connector. When an application is created and a specific connector type is selected, IdentityIQ may automatically populate schema elements such as the account schema, native identity attribute, display attribute, common account attributes, and sometimes group or entitlement schema definitions. This is common for standard connectors where the managed system has a predictable object model.

However, predefined does not mean final or immutable. The application administrator must still review and adjust the schema to ensure it accurately represents the implementation, including which attributes are aggregated, which attributes are searchable, which attributes are entitlements, and which attributes are used for identity correlation. Other connector types, such as generic JDBC, delimited file, or custom connectors, may require more manual schema definition.

This statement is therefore accurate because connector selection can provide default schema structure.

Reference topics: Applications, connector selection, account schema, group schema, schema attributes, aggregation configuration, and application definition.

NEW QUESTION # 75

Is this a purpose of identity governance and administration (IGA)?
Recording which data a user downloads

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

Recording which data a user downloads is not a core purpose of Identity Governance and Administration in SailPoint IdentityIQ. IGA is concerned with governing identities, accounts, access, entitlements, roles, policy violations, certifications, access requests, and provisioning. Its central objective is to answer questions such as who a user is, what access they have, whether that access is appropriate, who approved it, and whether access complies with defined business and security policies.

Tracking the specific files, records, or data objects downloaded by a user is typically associated with data activity monitoring, data loss prevention, security information and event management, or user behavior analytics. IdentityIQ may integrate with other systems and can govern access to applications or repositories that contain sensitive data, but it does not primarily function as a tool for recording every data download event.

In IdentityIQ terms, the governance focus is identity security: access visibility, access certification, policy enforcement, role modeling, lifecycle management, and provisioning controls. Reference topics: Foundational Concepts, purpose of identity security, common IdentityIQ terms, governance model, certifications, policies, and provisioning.

NEW QUESTION # 76

Does this statement accurately describe how roles are acquired by users in the default role model configuration?

The Perform Maintenance task adjusts role assignments to keep user access current.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

No. In the default IdentityIQ role model, role acquisition and role recalculation are not handled by the Perform Maintenance task. Role assignment and detection are primarily evaluated during identity refresh processing. The Identity Refresh task can update IdentityCubes, evaluate role assignment rules or role profiles, refresh detected roles, process policy evaluations, and recalculate identity-related governance state. This is the mechanism that keeps role relationships aligned with current identity attributes and account access.

The Perform Maintenance task serves a different operational purpose. It is generally used for system maintenance and cleanup activities, not for determining whether a user should acquire or lose a role. It does not function as the default engine for adjusting role assignments based on changes such as department, job title, location, lifecycle state, or account entitlements.

Therefore, the statement is inaccurate. Keeping role acquisition current is associated with identity refresh and role evaluation logic, not the Perform Maintenance task.

Reference topics: Access Modeling, business roles, IT roles, role assignment, detected roles, Identity Refresh task, IdentityCube recalculation, and Foundational Concepts: tasks versus workflows.

NEW QUESTION # 77

Is this statement true about group factories and/or populations?

New groups are created as a result of executing a task.

- A. Yes
- B. No

Answer: A

Explanation:

The statement is true. In SailPoint IdentityIQ, group factories are used to generate identity groups dynamically based on identity attribute values or configured grouping logic. A group factory defines the rule or attribute basis for grouping identities, but the actual creation or refresh of the resulting groups occurs when the appropriate task is executed. For example, a group factory might be configured to create groups by department, location, cost center, or business unit. When the task runs, IdentityIQ evaluates identities against the factory definition and creates or updates the corresponding groups.

This differs from populations, which are typically defined sets of identities used for targeting, filtering, reporting, or governance scoping. Group factories are more generation-oriented because they can produce multiple group objects from identity data. The task execution step is important because it materializes the groups so they can be used in IdentityIQ operations.

Therefore, new groups can be created as a result of executing a task tied to group factory processing.

Reference topics: Identity Modeling - groups and populations, group factories, identity grouping, and task- driven group creation.

NEW QUESTION # 78

Is this statement accurate about the BeanShell rules used in the aggregation process?

The application's creation rule, if specified, will run when IdentityIQ is unable to correlate an account to an existing identity.

- A. Yes
- B. No

Answer: A

Explanation:

Yes. In SailPoint IdentityIQ aggregation, correlation is attempted first to match an aggregated account to an existing IdentityCube. Correlation may use configured attribute mappings, correlation rules, or other application correlation logic. If IdentityIQ cannot correlate the account to an existing identity, the application's creation rule, when configured, can be invoked to determine how IdentityIQ should handle identity creation for that uncorrelated account.

This is especially relevant for authoritative applications, where aggregated account records may represent people who should exist as identities in IdentityIQ. The creation rule can control identity creation behavior, populate required identity attributes, and apply implementation-specific logic when standard correlation does not find a match. Without appropriate creation behavior, the account may remain uncorrelated and require later remediation through corrected correlation logic, re-aggregation, or manual correlation. Therefore, the statement is accurate: the creation rule is associated with the aggregation and correlation process and is used when an account cannot be matched to an existing IdentityCube. Reference topics: Applications, BeanShell rules, account aggregation, correlation logic, identity creation rules, authoritative applications, and uncorrelated account handling.
