While editing a file in vi, the file changes due to another process. Without exiting vi, how can the file be reopened for editing with the new content?

- A. :w
- B. :e
- C. :n
- D. :r

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

The :e command in vi is used to edit a file. If the file name is not specified, it will edit the current file. If the file has been changed by another process, the :e command will reload the file with the new content, discarding any unsaved changes made in vi. Therefore, the :e command can be used to reopen the file for editing with the new content without exiting vi. The other options are either invalid or do not perform the desired task.

The :r command is used to read the content of another file or command and insert it into the current file.

The :n command is used to edit the next file in the argument list, if any. The :w command is used to write the current file to disk, optionally with a new name. References:
