dbt Labs dbt Analytics Engineering Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q63-Q68):

NEW QUESTION # 63

A model passes its tests during development, but later fails when deployed on a less powerful production database. Which of the following might be the reason for this discrepancy?

- A. The test was accidentally disabled in the production dbt project.
- B. There's a bug in the version of dbt that runs in production.
- C. Performance-related test thresholds are too lenient in development.
- D. Source data distributions differ significantly between environments.

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

A and B could lead to tests passing in a forgiving environment but not catching issues in a more resource- constrained one. C would likely be caught earlier, and D is less likely

NEW QUESTION # 65

28. Consider this DAG:

* model_a # model_c # model_e

* model_b # model_d # model_f

(With model_c and model_d both feeding into the final layer.)

You execute:

dbt run --fail-fast

in production with 2 threads. During the run, model_b and model_c are running in parallel when model_b returns an error.

Assume there are no other errors in the model files, and model_c was still running when model_b failed.

Which model or models will successfully build as part of this dbt run? Choose 1 option.

- A. model_a
- B. model_a, model_c, model_e

- C. model_a, model_c, model_d, model_e, model_f
- D. model_a, model_c

Answer: D

Explanation:

The --fail-fast flag tells dbt to stop scheduling any new nodes as soon as one node fails. Importantly, dbt does not kill models that are already running; in-flight nodes are allowed to finish.

Here's what happens step by step with 2 threads:

- * Roots model_a and model_b start first.
- * model_a finishes successfully. That makes model_c eligible to run.
- * dbt now runs model_b and model_c in parallel.
- * While they are running, model_b fails.
- * Because --fail-fast is set, dbt immediately stops scheduling any additional models (like model_d, model_e, or model_f).
- * model_c was already running when model_b failed, so it is allowed to complete successfully.

Downstream models of either branch (model_d, model_e, and model_f) never start, because fail-fast prevents any further nodes from being queued after the first failure.

So, the only models that successfully build during this run are:

- * model_a (completed before model_b failed)
- * model_c (already running at the time of failure and allowed to finish) Hence the correct choice is B: model_a, model_c.

NEW QUESTION # 66

You've added new tests but notice they aren't failing even though you've intentionally introduced errors. What's a LIKELY cause?

- A. Your dbt project has multiple targets configured.
- B. Your tests have incorrect severity thresholds.
- C. You haven't compiled your project since writing the new tests.
- D. The tests are defined in seeds.csv files.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Compilation is necessary for new tests to be recognized. Others are less likely, though severity thresholds could be a factor if misconfigured.

NEW QUESTION # 67

(Multiple Select)

- A. A custom adapter to connect to a niche data source.
- B. Snapshots that track the state of your sources on a schedule.
- C. Models addressing a domain-specific use case (e.g., subscription analytics).
- D. Macros for fiscal period calculations or string manipulations.

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

Packages excel at providing reusable macros and domain-specific model sets. Snapshots and adapters are usually independent of or extend the core dbt feature set.
