NEW QUESTION # 70

A company needs to select a tool to support its Requirements Engineering process. Which statements do NOT apply to this selection process? (Select 3 answers.)

- A. The tool must include functionality for requirements modeling.
- B. The selection should not be influenced by existing tools in the company.
- C. The tool should be adaptable enough to support the current RE process.
- D. The decision on which tool to use should be made solely by its end users.

Answer: A,B,D

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:

Tool selection should consider multiple perspectives: process fit, IT architecture, organizational constraints, management, and end users. While end-user feedback is important, they alone should not make the decision; management and architecture perspectives are also crucial, so B does not apply. Modeling features may be desirable, but are not mandatory for all RE tools—for example, a traceability or repository tool may be chosen without modeling capabilities—so C is not a universal requirement. Existing tools and infrastructure matter:

Integration, interfaces and licensing significantly affect feasibility, making D incorrect. A accurately describes a process-fit criterion.
