Statements	Yes	No

Microsoft Entra ID Protection can detect whether user credentials were leaked to the public.	●	○
Microsoft Entra ID Protection can be used to invoke Multi-Factor Authentication based on a user's risk level.	●	○

Microsoft Entra ID Protection is designed to detect and respond to identity compromise by calculating user risk and sign-in risk and surfacing risk detections such as "leaked credentials," "anonymous IP address,"
"impossible travel," and related signals. Microsoft explains that Identity Protection "uses adaptive machine learning and threat intelligence to detect risky users and risky sign-ins and assigns each a risk level of Low, Medium, or High." These detections include "Leaked credentials (found on public or dark-web lists)", confirming that Identity Protection can detect when user credentials have been exposed.
ID Protection is integrated with Conditional Access to take policy-driven actions: "Risk-based Conditional Access policies let you require multi-factor authentication (MFA), block access, or require password change when a user or sign-in risk level is met." The built-in policies include User risk policy and Sign-in risk policy, which can automatically enforce MFA or password reset when the configured risk threshold is reached.
However, Identity Protection does not manage Azure AD group membership. There is no capability to add users to groups based on risk level; group membership changes are outside the scope of Identity Protection's controls. Instead, remediation is applied through Conditional Access or password reset policies driven by the calculated risk.
Therefore: adding users to groups based on risk (No); detecting leaked credentials (Yes); invoking MFA based on risk via Conditional Access (Yes).
